Overview

Executive Summary:

Ansar al-Sharia in Libya (ASL) was a violent Salafist group that was active in Libya from 2012 to 2017. The group sought to transform Libya into an Islamic state governed in accordance with sharia (Islamic law). At its height, ASL operated branches in Benghazi, Derna, Sirte, Ajdabiya, and Nawfalia.¹

ASL emerged from two smaller groups: the Ansar al-Sharia Brigade in Benghazi (ASB) and Ansar al-Sharia in Derna (ASD). ASB and ASD began operating under the name of “Ansar al-Sharia in Libya” in an effort to rehabilitate their public image after facing domestic and international condemnation for their alleged involvement in the September 2012 attack on the U.S. consulate in Benghazi.² ASL denied that it was connected to the consulate attack and, in an effort to rebrand, increased its focus on dawa (Islamic missionary work). Through the group’s dawa campaign—which included fixing schools and roads, opening medical clinics, and providing food for the hungry—ASL was able to win back the trust of many Libyans and to exert control in regions that had been long-neglected under former dictator Muammar Gaddafi.³

ASL’s connection to al-Qaeda central and to al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb has been recognized by local and international authorities. According to the United Nations, ASL operated training camps in Libya “mainly for the benefit of Al-Qaida associated groups in Syria and in Iraq.”⁴ Although ASL denied any official connection, the group’s former emir Mohamed al-Zahawi openly praised al-Qaeda in a 2012 BBC interview.⁵

Ansar al-Sharia in Libya (ASL)

On May 16, 2014, a retired Libyan army general named Khalifa Haftar launched a massive assault—codenamed “Operation Dignity”—on Islamist groups in Benghazi.⁶ Although ASL initially maintained control of Benghazi, civilian uprisings within the city and offensives launched by Haftar gradually eroded ASL’s control. Further, ASL suffered from the defection of a number of prominent ASL members to ISIS, including ASD founder Abu Sufyan Bin Qumu and ASL’s senior sharia official Abu Abdullah al-Libi.⁷ Lydia Sizer at the Middle East Institute noted that the number of ASL members defecting to ISIS appeared to increase after the death of Mohamed al-Zahawi in January 2015.⁸

Haftar’s Benghazi offensive ultimately led to the dissolution of ASL on May 28, 2017. ASL announced that, after being pushed back to its last two neighborhoods in the city, the group had lost too many fighters and leaders to continue functioning.⁹

Doctrine:

Sharia

ASL’s primary objective was to institute sharia in Libya. As the group’s former leader, Mohamed al-Zahawi, said, “Our brave youths will continue their struggle until they impose [sharia].”¹⁰ Like Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia, ASL viewed democracy as the antithesis to Islam. The group believed democracy subverted sharia by giving man the power to make law—a power ASL considered to be reserved for God alone. This belief separated ASL from the Muslim Brotherhood-affiliated Justice and Construction Party, and other Islamist groups that sought to introduce Islamic principles in Libya through the democratic process.¹¹

Dawa and Jihad

ASL viewed garnering public support through dawa as a necessary precursor to the establishment of an Islamic state in Libya.¹² In the absence of a strong local government, ASL’s dawa activities became integral to daily life in Benghazi.¹³ The group usurped the government’s role in providing a number of key social services, including cleaning, maintaining, and patrolling streets, collecting garbage, and establishing medical clinics and hospitals.¹⁴ Many of ASL’s dawa activities were designed to promote Islam. ASL ran Quranic competitions, provided food to the poor during the Muslim holidays of Eid and Ramadan, confiscated drugs and alcohol, and opened religious schools and centers. In media campaigns, ASL highlighted its outreach and charity efforts, portraying themselves as defenders and promoters of Islam and sharia.¹⁵

Aaron Y. Zelin, a fellow at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy, wrote that ASL likely emerged from the ideology of Abu Muhammad al-Maqdisi, who “has attempted to steer the jihadi community to a more ‘pure’ jihad” in order to offset the brutal image of jihad popularized by deceased al-Qaeda in Iraq leader Abu Musab al-Zarqawi.¹⁶ According to Zelin, al-Maqdisi tried to draw a distinction between the idea of qital al-nikayya (fighting to hurt or damage the enemy) and qital al-tamkin (fighting to consolidate one’s power). Zelin writes that “the former provides only short-term tactical victories... whereas the latter provides a framework for consolidating an Islamic state.” According to Zelin, ASL’s practices appeared to be in accord with qital al-tamkin.¹⁷

Hisba

ASL routinely used violence as a means to enforce sharia in Libya under the banner of hisba, the duty to command moral acts and to prohibit immoral ones.¹⁸ According to al-Zahawi, it was “a religious duty” to destroy and remove Sufi shrines that the group considered idolatry. He went on to explain: “people worship the deceased and this is prohibited. It is not me who says so but rather our religion.” ASL’s hisba activities also included confiscating anatomy books from the European School in Benghazi after deeming that they were “pornographic” in nature.¹⁹ Similarly, in February 2015, gunmen from an “al-Qaeda inspired militia” seized radio and television stations in Sirte after ASL “warned the station to stop broadcasting music.”²⁰

Organizational Structure:

ASL emerged from two smaller groups formed in the aftermath of the 2011 Libyan Revolution: the Ansar al-Sharia Brigade in Benghazi (ASB), founded by Mohamed al-Zahawi, and Ansar al-Sharia in Derna (ASD), established by Abu Sufian Bin Qumu.²¹ ASB and ASD initially operated independently, exerting control in Benghazi and Derna, respectively.²² The groups were reportedly drawn together after both faced domestic and international condemnation for their alleged involvement in the September 2012 attack on the U.S. consulate in Benghazi that killed four Americans, including U.S. Ambassador to Libya Christopher Stevens.²³ After the attack, al-Zahawi took steps to rebrand ASB. The group ramped up its dawa campaign and began to operate under the name of Ansar al-Sharia in Libya to convey its support for Islamic unity across the nation.²⁴ Media reports claimed that ASD had disbanded after the attack, however, Bin Qumu and other ASD members eventually re-surfaced in Derna as a semi-autonomous branch of ASL.²⁵ ASL eventually established additional branches in Sirte, Ajdabiya, and Nawfalia and reportedly had a presence in al-Bayda, Sabratha, and Tripoli.²⁶

Mohamed al-Zahawi served as ASL's emir until January 2015, when he died from wounds sustained in an October 2014 airstrike.²⁷ Six months later, on June 18, 2015, the group named Abu Khalid al-Madani as its new leader.²⁸ Little is known about ASL's organizational structure but the group reportedly had two main divisions: one dedicated to military affairs and one to philanthropy. ASL also operated a media apparatus called al-Raya Media Productions.²⁹

ASL joined forces with other Islamist factions after General Khalifa Haftar's Libyan National Army launched "Operation Dignity" in May 2014.³⁰ ASL, the 17 February Martyrs Brigade, and other Islamist militias in Benghazi formed a coalition called the Benghazi Revolutionaries' Shura Council (BRSC) on June 20, 2014.³¹ In December 2014, ASL's branch in Derna and other Islamist militias in the region founded the Derna Mujahideen Shura Council (DMSC), which was later renamed the Derna Protection Force (DPF).³² In the summer of 2016, ASL and the BRSC aligned with the umbrella organization Benghazi Defense Brigades (BDB) in the fight against Haftar's forces.³³ After enduring three years of debilitating losses of fighters and leaders, ASL officially disbanded on May 28, 2017.³⁴ A month later, on June 23, 2017, the BDB announced its plans to disband.³⁵ In Derna it appears that the DPF continues to fight against the LNA, with reports of clashes in the region in October 2018.³⁶

Financing:

Ansar al-Sharia militiamen reportedly received funding from the Libyan government to help clamp down on drug dealers and crime in Benghazi. Sources in Libya's Parliament allegedly revealed that these payments were made via the 17 February Martyrs Brigade and other militias in the region. According to a February 2013 Daily Beast report, the former chief of staff for Libya's ground forces, Yousef Mangoush, had "divert[ed] operational funds from the fledgling armed forces to the militia."³⁷

ASL also reportedly received donations from Libyan expatriates for the social services that it provided.³⁸

Recruitment and Training:

Recruitment

ASL operated a highly professional and organized media wing called al-Raya Media Productions Foundation and, like many other jihadist organizations, maintained an active social media presence.³⁹ ASL utilized a number of platforms including Facebook, Twitter, and Google Plus to attract new recruits.⁴⁰ On Twitter the group operated a series of accounts to create a "'correspondents' or 'reporters' network" to disseminate ASL propaganda, similar to that used by the Nusra Front \(Jabhat Fateh al-Sham\). ASL propaganda on Twitter included photos of ASL's civil and social services in Benghazi and information from the fight against Libyan forces. The group also used its Twitter accounts to praise its late leader Mohamed al-Zahawi's commitment to jihad and to circulate audio clips from 96.9 FM, a radio station that the group broadcasted in Benghazi.⁴¹ Twitter banned ASL's accounts, but the group quickly replaced them. In a new strategy, ASL launched several new feeds at once in late March 2015.⁴²

Training

According to the United Nations, Ansar al-Sharia in Derna maintained "several terrorist training camps" in the region "mainly for the benefit of Al-Qaida associated groups in Syria and in Iraq."⁴³ On April 6, 2016, Ansar al-Sharia in Derna released a video showing the graduation of a small group of fighters from its Martyr Milud Sadaqa training camp, where the men trained with small arms and light machine guns and learned basic infantry movements.⁴⁴ There is also evidence to suggest that ASL operated training camps in Benghazi.⁴⁵ Half of the 24 militants involved in the January 2013 In Amenas, Algeria, gas complex attack had reportedly trained in ASL camps in Benghazi.⁴⁶

Ansar al-Sharia in Libya (ASL)

Associations:

Ties to entities designated by the U.S. or foreign governments:

- Al-Mourabitoun

The U.N. acknowledged an association between Ansar al Sharia in Benghazi and al-Mourabitoun in a November 19, 2014 press release.⁹² French intelligence alleged that Mokhtar Belmokhtar, founder and leader of al-Mourabitoun, met with ASL fighters in Ubari.⁹³ Half of the 24 operatives involved in the January 2013 In Amenas, Algeria, gas complex attack had reportedly received training at ASL camps in Benghazi.⁹⁴

- Al-Qaeda Central

In November 2014, the United Nations sanctioned ASL as an entity associated with al-Qaeda.⁹⁵ Shortly after, former U.K. Foreign Secretary Philip Hammond expressed approval of the United Nations' sanctioning, stating that both ASB and ASD "have links with Al-Qaida."⁹⁶ In February 2016, the United Nations stated that Ansar al-Sharia in Derna maintained "several terrorist training camps" in the region "mainly for the benefit of Al-Qaida associated groups in Syria and in Iraq."⁹⁷ Although ASL officially denied any connections to al-Qaeda, the groups openly expressed support for one another.⁹⁸ ASL's former emir Mohamad al-Zahawi spoke favorably about al-Qaeda in a 2012 BBC interview, stating that al-Qaeda "help[s] galvanize the Muslim nation, maintain its dignity and pride."⁹⁹ Many ASL members had personal connections to al-Qaeda, including former Guantanamo detainee and founder of ASD, Abu Sufyan Bin Qumu.¹⁰⁰

- Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb \(AQIM\)

French intelligence believes that members of AQIM traveled to Libya to meet with ASL fighters in Ubari, southern Libya.¹⁰¹ The United Nations, in their designation of ASL as an entity associated with al-Qaeda, stated that ASL was also associated with AQIM and worked to train fighters traveling to Mali.¹⁰² AQIM frequently re-tweeted content posted on official ASL Twitter accounts and published a eulogy for a slain ASL commander on October 29, 2015.¹⁰³ In the September 2015 issue of ISIS's Dabiq, ISIS in Libya's emir complained about the "closeness" of ASL leaders to AQIM.¹⁰⁴

- Benghazi Revolutionaries' Shura Council

Also known as the Shura Council of Benghazi Revolutionaries, the Shura Council is made up of several brigades of anti-Gaddafi rebels, including ASL and Libya Shield.¹⁰⁵

- Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia \(AST\)

The United Nations, in its designation of ASL, noted that ASL has a support network among Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia (AST).¹⁰⁶ Tunisian security officials have stated that logistical, financial, and operational ties existed between the two groups, and that ASL sold weapons to AST.¹⁰⁷ Videos of Tunisians captured and interrogated by civilians in Libya suggest that members of AST traveled into Libya to train with ASL. An anonymous founding member of AST commented in a 2013 interview that the relations between Ansar al-Sharia in Egypt, AST, and ASL were like a "spider web." Members of the three organizations met and traveled together in the Gaza Strip and in northern Sinai in 2012, meeting with Palestinian Salafists about administration, organization, and management.¹⁰⁸

- ISIS

After AQIM rejected ISIS in favor of a continued allegiance to al-Qaeda, ISIS looked to ASL as a possible partner in North Africa. In July 2014, jihadist militants associated with ISIS began posting statements on social media sites and jihadist forums hoping to push ASL to pledge allegiance to ISIS.¹⁰⁹ That summer Abu Sufyan Bin Qumu became the first of ASL's leadership to defect to ISIS.¹¹⁰ In March 2015, ASL's senior sharia official, Abu Abdullah al-Libi, pledged allegiance to ISIS on Twitter, posting a photo of a book entitled The Legal Validity of Pledging Allegiance to the Islamic State. His pledge was accepted by the head of ISIS, Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi, and the jurist subsequently broke from ASL, taking a group of fighters with him.¹¹¹ Lydia Sizer at the Middle East Institute noted that the number of ALS members defecting to ISIS appeared to increase after the group's former leader Mohamed al-Zahawi died.¹¹²

Ansar al-Sharia in Libya (ASL)

Media Coverage:

Benghazi Consulate Attack

Within 24 hours of the consulate attack, news agencies began connecting Ansar al-Sharia to the assault. The BBC was one of the first networks to make the connection, stating on September 12, 2012, that Ansar al Sharia “took advantage of a demonstration against a trailer for a controversial American film.”¹¹³ This was the first time the militant group received widespread global media attention.

American media coverage focused on the attack resulting from spontaneous protests against the controversial film “Innocence of Muslims.” In a November 2012 study by George Mason University’s Center for Media and Public Affairs, researchers concluded that major U.S. news agencies portrayed the attack as a spontaneous protest four times as often as the attack was framed as a premeditated terrorist attack. The researchers posited that this was due to the Obama administration’s initial characterization of the attack arising from the spontaneous escalation of the protests.¹¹⁴ In a September 2012 article, NPR appeared to adopt this view. In an interview with ASL leader Mohamed al-Zahawi, in which he denies any ASL ties to the consulate attack and al-Qaeda, NPR portrays ASL as an unpopular but an almost necessary force to keep peace and stability in the country following the civil war. The report asserted that it was unlikely that ASL was connected to the consulate attack because, as NPR explained, the group was “not interested in provoking the West right now.” The report ends with the outlet paraphrasing ASL leaders who say that U.S. should not intervene, since any retaliation would backfire and threaten “this fragile transitional nation.”¹¹⁵

Fox News was critical of the Obama administration in the aftermath of the attacks. The network focused on what they saw as inaction on the part of the government, both in lack of response and in lack of investigation. Fox was most critical of the U.S. government’s hesitation in characterizing the assault on the consulate as a “terrorist attack.”¹¹⁶

Rhetoric:

ASL tweet, June 24, 2015

ASL does not “fight for this world nor for a certain position, glory, reputation, or admiration.” Instead, “we fight in defense of our religion, to establish the rule of God, and to follow the commands of our creator.”¹¹⁷

Abu Khalid al Madani, emir, radio broadcast, June 18, 2015

ASL and the ummah will “not be able to cast off our humiliation unless we wage jihad.”¹¹⁸

Captions on photos of ASL militants in a Benghazi training camp, March 19, 2015

“This is the latest class of the protectors of the Shariah and the opposers of injustice graduating from the mujahideen training camps to join their brothers in the battlefronts in order to complete the journey of jihad.”¹¹⁹

Abu Khalid al-Madani, future ASL leader, video statement, January 24, 2015

“Know that the curses of the mujahideen will come successively upon you like thunderbolts.”¹²⁰

Mohamed al-Zahawi, May 2014

“We remind America, if they intervene, of their defeats in Afghanistan, Iraq and Somalia, because they would face in Libya something much worse...It was America who urged Haftar to turn the country towards war and bloodshed.”¹²¹
