Executive Summary:

Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia (AST) was a Salafist group that was prominent in Tunisia from 2011 to 2013.¹² AST sought to implement sharia (Islamic law) in the country and used violence in furtherance of that goal under the banner of hisbah (the duty to command moral acts and prohibit immoral ones).¹³ AST also actively engaged in dawa (Islamic missionary work), which took on many forms but were largely centered upon the provision of public services.¹⁴ Accordingly, AST found a receptive audience among Tunisians frustrated with the political instability and dire economic conditions that followed the 2011 Tunisian Revolution.¹⁵ The group received logistical support from al-Qaeda central, al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM), Ansar al-Sharia in Libya (ASL), and later, from ISIS.¹⁶ AST was designated as a terrorist group by the United States, the United Nations, and Tunisia, among others.¹⁷

AST was originally conceived in a Tunisian prison by 20 Islamist inmates in 2006, according to Aaron Zelin at the Washington Institute for Near East Policy. Following the Tunisian Revolution in 2011, many of those Islamist inmates were pardoned and released from prison, including Seifallah Ben Hassine (a.k.a. Abu Iyad al-Tunisi).¹⁸ Ben Hassine formally established AST in April 2011 and, according to a spokesman for Tunisia's Interior Ministry, many of AST's original members "were among those released from prison" under the general pardon.¹⁹

Following the revolution, new-found civil liberties enabled AST to openly proselytize and the group claimed to amass as many as 70,000 followers.²⁰ AST initiated several violent protests, including the September 2012 attack on the U.S. embassy in Tunis.²¹ AST militants were also held responsible for the assassination of secular Tunisian politicians Chokri Belaid and Mohamed Brahmi in February and July 2013, respectively.²²

In August 2013, the Tunisian government designated AST as a terrorist organization and launched a large-scale crackdown on the group.²³ With the high number of arrests among its leadership and fighters and the rise of ISIS across the region, AST began to fragment.²⁴ In July 2014, AST spokesman Seifeddine Rais declared loyalty to ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi.²⁵ By mid-2015, analysts had reported that AST no longer existed in any meaningful way and that many of its surviving militants had left to fight alongside other jihadist groups in Libya and Syria.²⁶

Doctrine:

AST embraced Salafism: the belief that "pure Islam" was practiced by the generation of pious Muslims (the salaf) that lived around the time of the Prophet Muhammad.²⁷ To restore "pure Islam" in modern times, AST supported the creation of an Islamic state governed by sharia.²⁸ An unnamed AST member stated in an interview that "[t]he state that we imagine is based on God's laws. This is the [sic] not up for discussion. We are Muslims and we want to act according [to] the Quran and sunna [body of legal practice]."²⁹ AST claimed democracy and sharia cannot exist simultaneously—according to jihadist group scholar Aaron Y. Zelin, AST "believe[d] democracy is a separate religion from Islam."³⁰

AST members in Europe reportedly "flocked" to listen to al-Qaeda's "most influential" cleric, Abu Qatada, who was also known as Osama bin Laden's "European ambassador" for a time.³¹ AST shared al-Qaeda's vision of global jihad and promoted jihad abroad.³² "With our religion we can dominate the world, just like we used to in the past," an anonymous AST member declared in 2013.³³ In Tunisia, AST mainly focused on dawa, which it viewed as a precursor to future violent jihad.³⁴ "This is a long-term vision to prepare society," AST spokesman Hassen Brik said. "We are for jihad, armed revolution, but we cannot do this if the people are not with us. It will only be possible when everyone is behind the vision."³⁵

Organizational Structure:

According to an alleged AST leader, the group was a "lightweight and decentralized movement, with an extended autonomy for the local groups, which are the real core of the movement."³⁶ The leader went on to emphasize the importance of the organization's lowest level, local groups made up of around 20 people who coordinated the organization's activities neighborhood by neighborhood. The organization was reportedly divided into northern, central, and southern branches.³⁷

Counterterrorism scholar Daveed Gartenstein-Ross noted that although AST was divided into small, autonomous sub-groups, the group's senior leadership was not "irrelevant or lacking any means of control." In fact, senior leadership reportedly had direct control over various compartments, including offices for dawa, humanitarian activities, media, and tactical coordination.³⁸ Gartenstein-Ross explained that "sources loyal to AST have an incentive to portray it as decentralized... by emphasizing this decentralization, AST can engage in violence without triggering a state crackdown."³⁹

Financing:

Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia (AST)

AST's principal fundraisers were "[Tunisian] charities that raise financial and in-kind donations," according to Tunisian journalist Nebil Zaghdoud.

The Tunisian and U.S. governments claim AST received funding from al-Qaeda, particularly its affiliate al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb (AQIM). In August 2013, Tunisia's Director General of National Security, Mustapha Ben Amor, said that AST "is a member of the parent terrorist al-Qaeda" and that its financing came from "certain Arab countries, such as Yemen, Libya and Mali."⁴² David Cohen, then-U.S. Undersecretary of the Treasury for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence, stated that "AQIM...has provided funding for other terrorist groups including Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia."⁴³

Recruitment and Training:

AST claimed to have recruited as many as 70,000 members since it was established in April 2011, according to a 2014 Economist article.⁴⁴ AST appeared to attract recruits by capitalizing on popular frustration with the Tunisian government.⁴⁵ As one student supporter of AST said: "They welcome people, they perform charitable works that the state doesn't do: caravans bringing food aid, assistance, clothes, in every corner of the country in the poor neighborhoods."⁴⁶

Like other Salafist groups, AST seemingly expanded its membership by recruiting through "preaching tents" on school campuses.⁴⁷ AST also recruited through social media. The group's media wing, al-Qayrawan Media Foundation, used a Facebook page and Twitter account until both were removed. Al-Qayrawan later reemerged on those sites under other names.⁴⁸

Thousands of AST members received military training at camps in Libya and many went on to Syria to fight, alongside ISIS and other jihadist groups, against Bashar al-Assad's forces.⁴⁹

- December 17, 2014: In an ISIS video, AST-linked French-Tunisian jihadist Abubakr al-Hakim claims to have orchestrated the 2013 assassinations of secular Tunisian politicians Mohammed Brahmi and Chokri Belaid. After the Tunisian government designated AST as a terrorist organization in August 2013, analysts reported that many Islamists associated with the organization, including al-Hakim, joined ISIS in Syria. Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia (AST)

Associations:

Ties to Extremist Entities:

- Al-Qaeda

There is a long history of documented cooperation between AST and al-Qaeda. Former AST leader Seifallah Ben Hassine reportedly met with al-Qaeda leaders Osama bin Laden and Ayman al-Zawahiri before the 9/11 attacks. The Tunisian Combatant Group (TCG), founded by Ben Hassine in 2000, was accused of helping al-Qaeda assassinate Northern Alliance commander Ahmed Shah Massoud on September 9, 2001. In April 2001, a “dual TCG-al Qaeda operative” was arrested in Italy for planning an attack against the U.S. Embassy in Rome. The plot forced U.S. embassies and consulates across the country to close for the first time since the first Gulf War.⁸²

Long War Journal’s Thomas Joscelyn drew direct connections between AST and al-Qaeda in an October 2012 report in the Weekly Standard, writing that AST founder Ben Hassine was a “notorious al Qaeda terrorist.” Ben Hassine reportedly formed the Tunisian Combatant Group (TCG) “in coordination with’ al-Qaeda,” according to the United Nations.⁸³ As a close associate of al-Qaeda, Ben Hassine reportedly fought with the group alongside the Taliban in Afghanistan even after the country fell to coalition forces in 2001. A Joint Task Force-Guantanamo report found that Ben Hassine and other future Guantanamo detainees had formed a unit called the “Jalalabad Group” that “volunteered to defend [bin Laden] and the embattled al Qaeda fighters at Tora Bora.”⁸⁴

As for AST’s ideological influences, a young AST leader interviewed by Fabio Merone in 2013 said that AST shares its “theoretical references with the international jihadi movement.” Some of the group’s biggest ideological influences, including Abu Qatada al-Filastini, Abu Mohamed al-Maqdisi, Hani al-Sibai, and Anwar al-Awlaki, have established al-Qaeda connections. Abu Qatada, who was known as Osama bin Laden’s “European ambassador,” is allegedly the “most influential” of all, as AST members who lived in Europe “flocked to listen to his lessons.”⁸⁵

In its statements and media releases, AST has been outspoken about its strong relationship with al-Qaeda. In September 2013, AST posted a message on its Facebook page that read, “We remind again that our blessed method is declared and there is no hiding in it, and regarding our loyalty to Qaeda al Jihad and the jihadi formations, we have declared it from the first day and we are not ashamed to renew today our declaration with a louder voice.”⁸⁶

After bin Laden was killed in May 2011, Ben Hassine reportedly said: “Let the entire world celebrate the death of one of our Ummah’s leaders since the death and martyrdom of our leaders for the sake of this straight path... is an indication of the truthfulness of our way... This is the allegiance, and that is the promise to Allah—do not regress after the death of your sheikh [i.e., bin Laden], or the deaths of your leaders. Remain steadfast—and die for [the same cause] for which the best among you died.”⁸⁷ In January 2013, AST honored two more deceased al-Qaeda members of on its Facebook page: Said al Shihri, co-founder and deputy emir of al-Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula (AQAP), and Khalid bin Abdul Rahman al Husainan, a top leader of al-Qaeda central.⁸⁸

- Al-Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb \(AQIM\)

In October of 2013, Tunisian Prime Minister Ali Larayedh told Reuters, “There is a relation between leaders of Ansar al Sharia [Tunisia], al Qaeda in the Islamic Maghreb and Ansar al Sharia in Libya. We are coordinating with our neighbors over that.”⁸⁹ The U.S. government has commented that this relationship is financial, with David Cohen, then–Undersecretary of the Treasury for Terrorism and Financial Intelligence, saying that “AQIM... has provided funding for other terrorist groups including Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia.”⁹⁰ The U.S. Department of State has described AST as “ideologically aligned with al Qaeda and tied to its affiliates, including AQIM.”⁹¹

In December 2012, the Tunisian government identified a cell affiliated with AQIM known as the Militia of Uqba Ibn Nafaa in Tunisia.⁹² The government claimed that the cell members “were known for their active participation in events organized by Ansar al Sharia” but could not prove that the cell had an “organizational relationship” with AST.⁹³ In August 2013, the Tunisian government offered a direct link between AST and al-Qaeda when it designated AST as a terrorist organization. The government produced a handwritten “Allegiance Act” signed between Ben Hassine and AQIM leader Abdelmalik Droukdel.⁹⁴

On social media, AST has been openly supportive of AQIM, retweeting and helping to disseminate official AQIM communications and releases. AQIM has also praised AST operations and attacks.⁹⁵

- ISIS

Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia (AST)

AST expressed support for ISIS in social media posts and other official communications. On April 9, 2013, AST posted a photo of ISIS militants on its website with a banner that read: “O lions of god in all the earth Call out Allah Akbar, for victory and conquest is ours. Rejoice, for the glorious caliphate is near. Our [sharia] will reign over every corner [or inch of land].”⁹⁶

In May 2013, now-deceased AST deputy leader Kamel Zarrouk stated: “I would like to declare loud and clear, that the al-Nusra Front, Ansar al-Sharia, al-Qaeda, the Islamic State of Iraq and the mujahideen in Somalia, Mali, and Algeria, we all stand united against our enemies.”⁹⁷ However, when al-Qaeda formally severed ties with ISIS in February 2014, AST members were already divided in their support for the two groups.⁹⁸ Over the course of 2014, a number of AST leaders, including AST spokesman Seifeddine Rais, pledged allegiance to ISIS leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi.⁹⁹

After evading government capture in Tunis, Zarrouk reportedly traveled to Syria to fight alongside ISIS. Magharebia reported that “Zarrouk is known in his [Tunisian] neighborhood as someone who encouraged young people to go for jihad in Syria, which he considers to be the springboard for establishing an Islamic state from the Gulf to the ocean.”¹⁰⁰ Contrarily, AST leader Seifallah Ben Hassine discouraged Tunisians from migrating to “active jihad fronts” abroad, lamenting that the wars in Syria and Mali had “emptied Tunisia of its young.”¹⁰¹

After the Tunisian government designated AST as a terrorist organization in August 27, 2013, a large number of AST members traveled to Syria to fight alongside ISIS.¹⁰² In February 2014, it was estimated that more than 5,000 Tunisians had traveled to Syria to fight against Bashar al-Assad’s government.¹⁰³ That same month, Tunisian Interior Minister Lofti Ben Jeddou reported that Tunisian security forces had prevented 8,000 Tunisians from traveling to Syria to fight.¹⁰⁴ Tunisians have featured heavily in ISIS propaganda, and ISIS has regularly eulogized Tunisian fighters and suicide bombers.¹⁰⁵

• Ansar al-Sharia Libya (ASL)

AST and ASL shared logistical, financial, and operational ties.¹⁰⁶ The United Nations found that ASL’s Derna branch had provided significant support to AST in recruitment and the acquisition of weapons.¹⁰⁷ ASL also reportedly provided AST members with combat training at military camps in Libya.¹⁰⁸ AST members have openly commented on the group’s relations with ASL, with one anonymous founding member of AST stating in a 2013 interview that the groups, along with Ansar al-Sharia Egypt, are connected like a “spider web.” Members of the three organizations reportedly met and traveled together in the Gaza Strip and in northern Sinai in 2012 to discuss administration, organization, and management with Palestinian Salafists.¹⁰⁹

Ansar al-Sharia in Tunisia (AST)

Rhetoric:

AST Statement on the Jebel Chaambi attacks, July 2014

“God enabled the Knights of al-Qairawan, the mujahideen of Uqba [Ibn] Nafi, to increase another great masterpiece of epics, championships, and another lesson on the foolish idols who interpret the mujahideen’s silence and patience against their crimes as weakness and an inability to respond...They (the mujahideen) surprised them Wednesday evening, the 18th day of Ramadan, with a raid on two outposts stationed in the Chaambi mountains, leading to 15 dead and 20 wounded.”¹¹⁰

AST Facebook Page, September 2013

“We remind again that our blessed method is declared and there is no hiding in it, and regarding our loyalty to Qaedat al Jihad and the jihadi formations, we have declared it from the first day and we are not ashamed to renew today our declaration with a louder voice.”¹¹¹

Seifallah Ben Hassine, May 2013

“A message to our heroes who wrote and are writing with their blood and sweat the epics of Islam in the lands of jihad, may Allah give steadfast to your mujahidin and accept your martyrs and release your prisoners from the hands of your enemies and give your families patience and perish your and His enemy.”¹¹²

Kamel Zarrouk, May 2013

“I would like to declare loud and clear, that the al-Nusra Front, Ansar al-Sharia, al-Qaeda, the Islamic State of Iraq and the mujahideen in Somalia, Mali, and Algeria, we all stand united against our enemies.”¹¹³

AST Facebook Page, April 2013
